This bill would have expanded immunity from criminal prosecution and civil liability to physical force used in a place of business. The bill would have minimally affect state and local workload on an ongoing basis.

Appropriation Summary: No appropriation required.

Fiscal Note Status: This fiscal note reflects the introduced bill. This bill was not enacted into law; therefore, the impacts identified in this analysis do not take effect.

Summary of Legislation

This bill expands immunity from criminal prosecution and civil liability to physical force, including deadly physical force, used by an owner, manager, or employee of a business when another person makes an unlawful entry into a place of business, and that person has a reasonable belief that the other person has committed, is committing, or intends to commit a crime against the place of business, and believes the other person might use physical force against any owner, manager, or employee of the place of business.

Background

Under current law, an occupant of a dwelling is immune from criminal prosecution and civil liability if the occupant uses physical force or deadly physical force against another person who has unlawfully entered the dwelling if the conditions described above are met.

In addition, current law also permits the use of physical and deadly physical force in order to defend oneself or a third person from what is reasonably believed to be the use or imminent use of unlawful physical force. Deadly physical force can only be used if a person reasonably believes a lesser degree of force is inadequate and:

- the person reasonably believes that he or she or another person is in imminent danger of being killed or being gravely injured;

- the other person is using or reasonably appears to be about to use physical force against an occupant of a dwelling or business while committing or attempting to commit burglary; or
- the other person is committing or reasonably appears about to commit kidnaping, robbery, or sexual assault.

Assumptions

This fiscal note assumes that cases relating to the use of deadly physical force at a place of business are rare and that such cases already involve existing state laws regarding the use of deadly physical force. As such, the bill is not anticipated to reduce the number of criminal case filings with the courts or impact the number of persons sentenced to in the Department of Corrections.

State Expenditures

Beginning in the current FY 2018-19, workload in the Judicial Department and the judicial agencies that represent indigent persons will be affected. To the extent that deadly force cases become more complicated due to the need to review the circumstances of the case and determine if the immunity created by this bill applies, workload will increase for the trial courts and judicial agencies that represent indigent persons. However, to the extent that this new immunity applies, workload may decrease, since the trial will not move forward. This fiscal note assumes any change in workload will be minimal and does not require a change in appropriations.

Local Government

To the extent that deadly force cases become more complicated, workload will increase for District Attorneys. However, to the extent that this new immunity applies, workload may decrease, since the trial will not move forward. This fiscal note assumes any change in District Attorneys workload will be minimal

Effective Date

This bill was postponed indefinitely by the House State, Veterans, and Military Affairs Committee on January 24, 2019.
