Summary of Legislation

The bill allows an employer to continue to purchase small-group health insurance after growing to the point of no longer meeting the definition of small employer, or no longer meeting that definition for another reason, so long as the employer renews its existing health insurance plan. If the employer opts to renew the small group health insurance plan, the insurance carrier is required to offer the same plan, or if that plan is no longer offered to any small employer, a similar plan. In these instances, state rules governing small-group health insurance continue to apply.

The bill requires insurance carriers, upon learning that an employer no longer meets the definition of small employer, to notify them that small-group insurance laws and rules will no longer apply to them if they fail to renew their current small-group health insurance plan.

Background

There are three primary health insurance market segments that are subject to state regulation through the Division of Insurance in the Department of Regulatory Agencies: the individual, small-group employer-based, and large-group employer-based markets, with the exception of self-insured employers. Small-group regulation applies to employers with 99 or fewer employees; large-group regulation to employers with 100 or more. In 2019, about 1 million Coloradans received coverage from health insurance plans under the jurisdiction of the Division of Insurance, as shown in Table 2.

Table 2
2019 Health Insurance Coverage by Market Segment

Market Segment	Covered Lives
Individual	204,138
Small Group	266,783
Large Group	579,169
Total Covered Lives	1,050,090

State Expenditures

The Division of Insurance will need to update its rules to reflect this change in law. The required workload is minimal and can be accomplished within existing appropriations. Some employers may purchase small-group plans that would otherwise have purchased large-group plans; this difference does not result in an appreciable change in workload for the division.

Effective Date

The bill takes effect 90 days following adjournment of the General Assembly sine die, assuming no referendum petition is filed.
