CONCERNING MEASURES TO ENHANCE OUTDOOR RECREATION OPPORTUNITIES IN THE STATE, AND, IN CONNECTION THEREWITH, EXPANDING THE DIVISION OF PARKS AND WILDLIFE'S CAPACITY FOR OUTDOOR RECREATION COORDINATION, PLANNING, AND MANAGEMENT, AND MAKING AN APPROPRIATION.

Be it enacted by the General Assembly of the State of Colorado:

SECTION 1. Short title. The short title of this act is the "Colorado Outdoor Opportunities Act".

SECTION 2. Legislative declaration. (1) The general assembly finds and declares that:

Capital letters or bold & italic numbers indicate new material added to existing law; dashes through words or numbers indicate deletions from existing law and such material is not part of the act.

(a) It is the policy of the state of Colorado that the state's unparalleled landscapes, wildlife, public lands, and outdoor experiences be protected, conserved, and enhanced for the benefit and enjoyment of current and future generations, while protecting the state's agricultural heritage and private property rights;

(b) Outdoor recreation, access to quality outdoor experiences, and the conservation of lands and wildlife habitats, all within the context of a changing climate and growing population, are vital components in ensuring a thriving future for Colorado's outdoors;

(c) Outdoor recreation is fundamental to Colorado's economy, culture, and identity, contributing to public health, community well-being, and the development of lifelong connections to the outdoors. Outdoor recreation annually contributes $65.8 billion to Colorado's economy and supports 404,000 jobs, over 12% of the entire labor force in Colorado.

(d) Outdoor recreation's significant economic, fiscal, and community benefits across the state include revenue that supports public services, infrastructure, and investments, from transportation to child care and mental health services, that contribute to the health, safety, and welfare of Coloradans. It is important that these benefits be equitably distributed throughout the state to the extent possible.

(e) Ensuring safe, high-quality outdoor experiences through purposeful planning, coordination, and management is essential to sustaining the state's outdoor heritage;

(f) Connecting youth to outdoor experiences is vital for ensuring the long-term well-being of the state's residents, since research demonstrates that outdoor engagement supports improved cognitive abilities, fosters creativity and resilience, and is essential for promoting public health and reducing stress, and many communities face barriers to accessing the outdoors and the benefits of spending time in nature;

(g) Colorado's outdoors face significant and urgent pressures from growing populations, human disturbance, and development, alongside severe climate-driven impacts such as wildfires, drought, and rising temperatures. It is essential that the state play an active role in appropriately managing these pressures to ensure Colorado's outdoors are available for future generations.

(h) Thoughtful planning and management of outdoor recreation and associated infrastructure should consider economic, fiscal, and service-related impacts on local communities and regions and can support conservation goals by reducing resource impacts, improving stewardship, and sustaining the long-term health of the state's public lands;

(i) Colorado has a long-standing tradition of managing public lands and working landscapes to support a range of compatible uses and affirms that coordinated outdoor recreation management can occur alongside conservation, agricultural operations, and other land uses in ways that support long-term resource stewardship and community values;

(j) As more visitors and Coloradans participate in all forms of outdoor recreation, it is important to advance exceptional recreation experiences that are accessible, inclusive, and sustainable so that future generations may continue to enjoy the state's world-class outdoor opportunities;

(k) To effectively manage these challenges, the state must formalize and strengthen collaboration across conservation, wildlife, agriculture, and recreation partners, local governments, Tribal governments, and federal land managers, including by soliciting rural perspectives; develop shared tools and data; advance coordinated planning that recognizes that Colorado's public and private lands support multiple uses; and align funding to support voluntary, strategic actions that sustain high-quality recreation opportunities while maintaining resilient landscapes, wildlife habitat, working lands, and community values for all Coloradans;

(l) Colorado's outdoors strategy, developed by the department of natural resources, the division of parks and wildlife, great outdoors Colorado, the office of climate preparedness in the governor's office, and the outdoor recreation industry office in the office of economic development, in collaboration with partners and stakeholders, provides the necessary statewide vision and coordination to advance conservation, climate resilience, and outdoor recreation opportunities. One strength of Colorado's outdoors strategy is its voluntary approach that allows partners to leverage opportunities that support locally determined needs.

(m) The general assembly recognizes the role that the Colorado outdoor regional partnerships initiative, created by the governor's executive order B 2020 008, plays in convening vital perspectives, partners, and expertise in land conservation, land use, and recreation planning. The initiative is a locally driven and powerful platform for early and proactive coordination among stakeholders, helping to identify shared priorities, reduce conflict, and advance tangible outcomes for outdoor recreation and conservation statewide. It is the intent of the general assembly that the initiative remains a voluntary and locally derived process with opportunities for stakeholder engagement, including county governments.

(n) The division of parks and wildlife engages and will continue to engage in formal consultation with Tribal governments, including the Southern Ute Indian Tribe and Ute Mountain Ute Tribe, which are the two federally recognized tribes with reservations in Colorado, when the division is requested to do so and when issues of importance to Tribal governments arise, which issues concern outdoor recreation or division actions on state public lands that may affect Tribal sovereignty or treaty rights of the Tribal governments in Colorado, including history, culture, and natural and cultural resources;

(o) Meaningful engagement with tribal nations is important, and the collaborative framework developed in Colorado's outdoors strategy is crucial to support ongoing tribal participation in statewide outdoor recreation and conservation efforts;

(p) The outdoor recreation industry office plays a vital role in advancing outdoor recreation. The mission of the office is to champion industry, communities, and people through Colorado's great outdoors. The office is a vital partner for the division of parks and wildlife in coordinating outdoor recreation industry partnerships and supporting the division in planning and outcomes for the advancement of exceptional and sustainable outdoor recreation opportunities.

(q) Local governments are critical partners in outdoor recreation planning, coordination, and management, and recreation impacts communities in different ways. The rapid increase in demand for outdoor recreation is challenging local governments' ability to maintain access and provide related services. For example, counties and municipalities frequently experience increased and unique demands related to outdoor recreation, including emergency services. Counties are well suited to convene area partners and play a critical role in identifying and addressing localized impacts of recreation, and state coordination should incorporate local perspectives to reduce unintended burdens on community infrastructure and services. It is essential that the state work in partnership with local governments to manage these impacts and advance locally driven visions for outdoor recreation.

(r) With approximately 60% of Colorado land in private ownership, working with private landowners is also essential to the success of Colorado's outdoors strategy, and it is important to ensure that agricultural interests, private landowners, including private landowners adjacent to outdoor recreation development, and local governments are integrally involved in state efforts; wildlife habitats are protected; and private property rights are upheld as conservation and recreation management decisions are made;

(s) The division of parks and wildlife possesses a long history of outdoor recreation planning, management, and recreational asset delivery through its state parks system, which serves as a significant source of exceptional and accessible outdoor recreation opportunities. The division's responsibilities extend beyond state park boundaries and encompass outdoor recreation coordination, wildlife conservation, and support for partners managing lands across all jurisdictions. As a leader in outdoor recreation management, the division is well-positioned to play a critical coordinating role in advancing outdoor recreation planning and management statewide, beyond the boundaries of its current 43 state parks. It is the intent of the general assembly to formalize the division's role in meeting these responsibilities, without diminishing the division's long-standing responsibilities.

(t) The division of parks and wildlife assumes lead responsibility as the state's coordinating entity for advancing implementation of Colorado's outdoors strategy, in partnership with the department of natural resources, great outdoors Colorado, the outdoor recreation industry office, the office of climate preparedness, and other state and local government partners. In this role, the division facilitates early and proactive coordination and planning among agencies and stakeholders to reduce conflict, improve efficiency, and ensure accountability in advancing its goals and vision to find mutually beneficial outcomes that support and maintain Colorado's world-class outdoor recreation and natural resources.

(2) The general assembly further finds the need to expand and strengthen the division of parks and wildlife's capacity for the coordination, planning, development, and management of Colorado's outdoor recreation to ensure the state's recreation opportunities provide high-quality visitor experiences that are responsibly managed to align natural resources, wildlife, agricultural heritage, private property, and public safety. The general assembly further recognizes that 36% of Colorado is federal public land and a significant amount of recreation in Colorado occurs on federal public lands; therefore, there is a growing need for the division to support recreation management and stewardship on federal public lands, which necessitates increased staff capacity and enhanced coordination with federal land management agencies, without expenditures from the wildlife cash fund created in section 33-1-112 (1)(a), Colorado Revised Statutes.

SECTION 3. In Colorado Revised Statutes, 33-10-102, add (1.5), (2.5), (2.7), (2.9), (7.5), (10.5), and (13.5) as follows:
