Summary of Legislation

Current law requires individuals filing for dissolution of marriage or legal separation to disclose to courts any restraining orders and protection orders entered within the past two years. The bill requires the disclosure of any orders within five years of filing the petition.

When determining spousal maintenance, the bill requires the court to consider whether a spouse has engaged in domestic violence, coercive control, economic abuse, litigation abuse, emotional abuse, physical abuse, or unlawful sexual behavior against the other spouse.

State Expenditures

Workload will minimally increase for the Judicial Department to review additional protection orders from the extended five-year disclosure requirement in dissolution of marriage and legal separation cases. Workload will also increase for courts to consider factors related to abuse when determining spousal maintenance. As courts currently review protection orders and various factors when making determinations, any increase in workload is expected to be minimal and can be absorbed within existing resources.

Effective Date

The bill takes effect 90 days following adjournment of the General Assembly sine die, assuming no referendum petition is filed.
