Summary of Legislation

This bill prohibits the civil arrest of a person who is present at a courthouse or on its environs, or while going to, attending, or coming from a court proceeding. A judge or magistrate may issue a writ of protection to prohibit a civil arrest, but the protection applies regardless of whether a writ of protection has been issued. The chief judge of any court may enter an order requiring that arrests made while persons are present at a courthouse or on its environs, or while going to, attending, or coming from a court proceeding, comply with this section.

A person who violates this prohibition is liable for damages in a civil action and is subject to contempt of court. The Attorney General may bring a civil action for a violation and a person arrested or detained may seek a writ of habeas corpus.

State Expenditures

This bill may increase workload for the trial courts in the Judicial Department and the Department of Law as described below.

Trial courts. The bill requires a judge or magistrate to ensure that a civil arrest at a courthouse or its environs complies with the provisions of the bill. In a situation where a civil arrest is made in violation of the provisions of the bill, a judge or magistrate may file a contempt of court charge, which can lead to a trial depending on the type of sanction sought. The fiscal note assumes that these instances will be minimal and will not require an increase in appropriations.

Department of Law. The Attorney General may bring a civil action for a violation of the prohibition of civil arrest. These actions are expected to be minimal and can be accomplished within existing appropriations.

Local Government

Local governments that employ courthouse security will see an increase in workload for security officers to question law enforcement officers who are in the courthouse, but not working for the courthouse or participating in a court proceeding. They are also required to maintain a record of the information.

Effective Date

The bill was signed into law by the Governor on March 23, 2020, and takes effect September 14, 2020, assuming no referendum petition is filed.
