BY REPRESENTATIVE(S) Williams T., Borodkin, Boyd, Brophy, Cloer, Coleman, Frangas, Hoppe, Jahn, Lundberg, Mitchell, Paccione, Spradley, Stafford, Vigil, and Williams S.;
also SENATOR(S) Anderson, Arnold, Evans, Groff, Hagedorn, Hanna, Isgar, Jones, Owen, Sandoval, Taylor, and Tupa.

AN ACTCONCERNING RECORDS OF CHILD ABUSE OR NEGLECT FOR THE PROTECTION OF CHILDREN.

Be it enacted by the General Assembly of the State of Colorado:

SECTION 1. Legislative declaration. In repealing the state central registry of child protection, the general assembly hereby finds and declares the following:

(1) In 1969 the state central registry of child protection, referred to as the central registry, was established as a computer-based system to record perpetrators and victims of child abuse or neglect in order to aid in investigations and to screen potential employees in child care-related positions.

(2) Nearly 15 years ago, the legislature determined that the central registry needed improvement, and passed Senate Bill 87-63, "Concerning the deterrence of offenses against children, and, in connection therewith, improving the effectiveness of the central registry and amending various reporting provisions and parent-child termination procedures to facilitate child protection". Emphasis added.

(3) Despite the passage of Senate Bill 87-63, a report of the state auditor evaluating the performance of the central registry in October of 1990, referred to as the 1990 report, found that "the registry contains a high degree of inaccurate information". At that time, the central registry contained over forty thousand confirmed incidents of child abuse or neglect. The inaccuracies included the listing of names of individuals on the central registry for which evidence was not available to support a listing, as well as inconsistencies in reports received from counties, a failure to contain all confirmed cases of child abuse or neglect, a failure to contain information concerning deaths due to child abuse, and a failure to contain the names of persons convicted of child abuse-related felonies.

Capital letters indicate new material added to existing statutes; dashes through words indicate deletions from existing statutes and such material not part of act.

(4) In addition to these inaccuracies, the 1990 report found that county departments of social services, referred to as county departments, had differing standards for reporting cases to the central registry and in many instances failed to report confirmed cases of child abuse or neglect to the central registry. In a sample of the case files of ten different county departments, fifty percent of the cases reviewed were confirmed incidents of child abuse or neglect that were never reported to the central registry.

(5) The 1990 report found that the unreliability of the central registry could be detrimental to both children and alleged perpetrators and concluded that "because of current problems with the Registry . . . the Department needs to assess whether the Registry is fulfilling its intended purposes and functions."

(6) The state department of human services, referred to as the state department, argued in its response to the 1990 report that legislation passed in 1990 and legislation proposed for the 1991 session would improve the central registry's accuracy of information and reliability of data and that the increased resources the legislature assigned to the central registry would improve the central registry's effectiveness in meeting the goal of protecting children. Overall, the state department committed to improved functioning, better timeliness, automation of data, and improved responsiveness to those seeking information or requesting expungement of names from the central registry. These improvements did not come to fruition.

(7) In 1997, the general assembly passed House Bill 97-1109, which bill found that "the state of Colorado could phase out the state central registry of child protection as a separate state program with no adverse impact on the state's interest in protecting children" and required the state department to convene a group of stakeholders and to submit an implementation plan to the general assembly for the phase-out of the central registry.

(8) In 1998, the group of stakeholders consisting of representatives of law enforcement, district attorneys, the attorney general's office, counties, parents, and child advocacy groups, recommended against elimination of the central registry of child protection because of the delays in implementation of the electronic TRAILS system at the state department and because there was no other database containing this information. The central registry database was maintained.

(9) Most recently, a report of the state auditor evaluating the performance of the central registry in November of 2001, referred to as the 2001 report, has found that, while there have been numerous attempts over the course of the previous ten years to modify the central registry in order to eliminate problems encountered with its operation, there are still "significant problems with the system", including problems directly related to the accuracy, reliability, and use of data in the system.

(10) The 2001 report found that there are now one hundred seven thousand eight hundred forty-eight records maintained by the central registry, but that inaccuracies and incompleteness plague the data contained in these records. Seven thousand six hundred of the records contained in the central registry were missing the perpetrator's birth date and forty-six thousand of the records were missing the perpetrator's social security number, making proper identification of alleged perpetrators nearly impossible for investigators researching prior incidents or conducting screening checks. In addition, there have been significant data entry errors by employees entering information from hard copy reports into the central registry system, resulting in incorrect social security number identification and incorrect listings of the severity of abuse, information which is critical to any useful review of these records. Further, there is no systematic check in place to ensure that information that is actually in the central registry is accurate.

(11) In addition, the 2001 report found that county departments continued to vary in reporting confirmed incidents of child abuse or neglect to the central registry, and to differ in their interpretation of what constitutes a "confirmed incident of child abuse or neglect" for purposes of making such a report. Forty-seven percent of county departments believed that the information their county departments submitted to the central registry was not consistent with the information other county departments submitted to the central registry, and county department staff expressed concern about the inconsistent information contained in the central registry.

(12) Moreover, the 2001 report found that the central registry failed to list criminals convicted of child abuse on the central registry. Of only one thousand one hundred thirty-six criminal records reviewed in the performance audit, three hundred five of these individuals were convicted of major child abuse or sexual abuse crimes against a child on or after January 1, 1997, but were not listed on the central registry. A sample of forty-eight registered sex offenders who had perpetrated sexual crimes against children revealed that forty percent of the sample were not listed on the central registry.

(13) While sexual predators have been omitted from the central registry, the 2001 report found that some individuals remain on the central registry after they have been acquitted of related charges, despite a state statutory mandate for the director to expunge the subject's name related to the act or acts that supported such alleged criminal offense. In order for the state of Colorado to receive a federal grant for a child abuse and neglect prevention and treatment program, federal law requires the Governor to certify that Colorado has in effect and is enforcing a state law related to child abuse and neglect that includes provisions requiring, and procedures in place that facilitate, the prompt expungement of any records that are accessible to the general public or that are used for purposes of employment or other background checks in cases determined to be unsubstantiated or false. At least one hundred ninety-one individuals acquitted of child abuse on or after June 1, 2000, were listed on the central registry in November of 2001. Moreover, cases have also been inappropriately maintained in the "status pending" category. These cases threaten Colorado's receipt of federal funding.

(14) The 2001 report found that the legislature has attempted on six different occasions over the past thirty years to develop a clear vision for the central registry, however, despite expending nearly one million three hundred thousand dollars on the central registry in fiscal year 2001, "it is not clear that the Central Registry has been successful in protecting children, providing due process to individuals accused of child abuse, or helping employers screen potential staff." The 2001 report concluded, similarly to the conclusion in the 1990 report, that "the basic purpose and intent of the Central Registry should be challenged."

(15) Based on the foregoing, the general assembly hereby finds and declares the following:

(a) That the purpose of the central registry has been thwarted because the database designed to serve as a screening and investigative tool maintains information that is unreliable, inaccurate, and ultimately useless as a source of legitimate information;

(b) That these inaccuracies have prevented any form of consistent protection of children because the names of convicted child perpetrators have been omitted from the central registry. Further, the conclusive matching of a screened individual with a name on the central registry is impossible due to inaccurate and incomplete records.

(c) That the structure of the reporting process wherein county departments responsible for reporting confirmed reports of child abuse or neglect have failed to apply the same standard from county to county is manifestly unfair to the subjects of reports of child abuse or neglect and leads to inconsistent and, ultimately, ineffective central registry information;

(d) That the failure to review and expunge records as required by state law has prevented any meaningful protection of the due process rights of the individuals listed on the central registry, leaving alleged subjects of reports of child abuse and neglect stigmatized by having their names on the central registry despite being acquitted by a court of law;

(e) That the failure to review and expunge records as required by state law risks the loss of federal funding due to noncompliance with the federal requirement for states to expunge records that are used for purposes of employment or other background checks when the cases are determined to be unsubstantiated or false;

(f) That the state department and the county departments currently maintain and share records and reports of child abuse or neglect through computer systems, including the TRAILS electronic system, and that a review of these records and reports of child abuse or neglect by the state department and county departments is a legitimate screening alternative to the central registry system;

(g) That the Colorado bureau of investigation provides a legitimate source of information concerning criminal history background information which may be provided to individuals, the state department, and county departments of social services for the protection of children;

(h) That it is in the best interests of the children and citizens of the state of Colorado for the list of names on the central registry to be expunged and the statutory provisions concerning the central registry to be repealed; except that, nothing shall prevent the state department or the county departments of social services from maintaining case file records and reports for use in future risk and safety assessments.
