

THE COLORADO MODEL

The proposed bill generally prohibits the manufacture, sale, and transfer of semi-automatic rifles and shotguns, and gas-operated pistols, that accept detachable magazines. But it would not touch several classes of weapons, as shown below.

Several types of semiautomatic rifles, shotguns, and pistols (as shown below) could be made compliant under the proposed bill if they are fitted with permanently fixed magazines. Fixed-magazine adapters designed for states like California and New York — sold either on their own or fitted in complete weapons — would need to be permanently installed with epoxy, for example.¹ Gun manufacturers could also weld, solder, or stake in place magazines that hold 15 or fewer rounds of ammunition.
