

The following are key findings from the national poll of 1,000 registered voters, which was conducted January 5th – 11th, 2016:

- School Concerns: the over-reliance on standardized testing, lack of parental involvement and cuts to programs like music, arts and PE are top concerns, but lack of school choice does not register as a top concern. Voters focus on too much focus on standardized tests, cuts to school funding, lack of parental involvement, and class size as the biggest problems facing K-through-12 education. Lack of school choice ranks dead last on their list of concerns.
- Making a Good School: highly qualified, caring teachers are the most important to creating a great K-through-12 school. Parental involvement, smaller classrooms and more focus on learning than standardized testing are also important.
