GROUP TO WORK FOR GOOD COLORADO CAUCUS IN 2018 AND BEYOND..

"We are recruiting a state-wide network of volunteers and a steering committee," says John Wren.

Denver—A new Colorado political committee has been formed to do just what it's name implies, Save the Caucus, according to John Wren registered agent of the new group. Information meetings will be held for those interested in helping. For more see <http://www.COCaucus.org> or call Wren at (303)861-1447

"Our focus now is 100% the Colorado Caucus, the best chance the common person has of serving in elected public office. We will recruit a working committee and then train over 3,000 volunteers across Colorado this summer. Each volunteer will work with both their Republican and Democratic precinct committee people and other neighborhood activists to make sure good leadership at the district, county and state levels for both major political parties make sure a this year's fiasco doesn't happen again."

"Strong neighborhoods have good caucuses," said Wren. Depending on local conditions, each PL (Precinct Leader) will welcome newcomers to the neighborhood, create and distribute a hyper-local newsletter, and hold neighborhood social events. Each precinct will be autonomous, Save the Caucus will provide training and other support.

"Our first jobs are to recruit a strong steering committee, raise money, and once an initial budget is approved to hire staff. We will fight to Save the Caucus in the elections next fall, fighting any Colorado Caucus killing initiative or legislation, then working to have a healthy 2018 Colorado Caucus. We expect to have a statewide event before the elections next fall, and if we've been successful it will involve leaders from similar efforts in other states," said Wren.
