Karen Kalavity For themselves	Sounds like a good idea to me. Conserving water for use in many situations - including irrigation of landscaping - should be incorporated into ALL livable cities. This includes cities in "semi-arid environments" such as Colorado where tempering our outside temperatures and environment with natural coolants and air purifiers...that is, plants, can help to make our cities green, refreshing and livable. This is instead of making our outside spaces nothing but dead and inanimate heat islands.
